Nissi Beach

The  stretches for 500 metres and the water is clean enough for the beach to have been awarded the blue flag designation. The beach, which runs the length of its own cove, takes its name from the small islet of Nissi located close to the coast. Nissi Beach has become a popular destination for clubbers following live programs transmitted through BBC's Radio 1 Roadshow during the summer tourist season since 2002. Nissi Bay Beach Bar is very popular with locals and tourists alike, playing music throughout the day and organizing events such as foam parties and catwalks with guest DJs. Water sports such as water-skiing and windsurfing are available. There are also two beach volleyball courts open to the public. In 2005, archaeological excavations along the western borders of the bay revealed evidence of fire-lighting equipment dating back 12,000 years, indicating that the area could have been settled by the first humans on the island.

Piha Beach
 Piha Beach is a world-famous surfing location with experienced surfers, but it's also a popular spot for picnics, relaxing walks and swims under the watchful eye of the famous Piha Surf Club. See Lion Rock, a small island that stands in the middle of the beach. Black-sand Piha Beach is known for its strong surf and rugged scenery. Lion Rock is a volcanic monolith with war memorials and Moai carvings. Neatly, Waitakere Ranges Regional Park has subtropical native rainforest and trails to waterfalls such as Kirekite and Fairy Falls. Kerekare, to the south, also has a black sand beach. The area is traditionally a part of the Tāmaki Māori tribe Te Kawerau ā Maki. The area is named for Te Piha, the traditional name of Lion Rock which was later applied to the wider area, and refers to the pattern made when waves hit against the rock. The area was the location of many pā and villages, including a headland at Te Waha Point north of the beach, where many kauri trees associated with the former pā grow, and Lion Rock, which was the location of Whakaiwhakahe. Archaeological surveys have shown the remains of platforms, midden and terraces on Lion Rock, as well as fragments of traditional textiles, dating back to a time before European contact.

Bracklesham Bay Beach
 Bracklesham Bay is a 200.6-hectare (496-acre) biological and geological Site of Special Scientific Interest in West Sussex.

Climbing Beach
 Climbing Beach is a 321-hectare (79-acre) biological Site of Special Scientific Interest west of Littlehampton in West Sussex.

Climbing Beach
 The eastern half is designated a Local Nature Reserve called West Beach. This stretch of shoreline has sand dunes at the back with a vegetated shingle beach, which is a nationally uncommon habitat, in front. The intertidal zone has soft muds and sands with many invertebrates, which are an important source of food for wintering birds, especially sanderling. St Mary of Haura Church (St Mary of the Haven) was built in the decade following 1103 (the Domesday Book was dated 1086), and around this time the town was laid out on a grid pattern that, in essence, still survives in the town centre. The present church is approximately half the size of the original structure.
